need to get the maximum performance from modern processors has increased exponentially. The total compute power available on mobile computing systems has increased, but it is now available mostly in the form of a couple of CPUs and a limited amount of memory. The many customers who are using mobile computing systems need the maximum efficiency from each available resource. Being able to put more power and more memory into a CPU to help meet performance needs is a problem that has not been solved. Intel's significant improvements to its IP are not enough to keep up with the demand for more performance, and the enterprise customers have had to be selective about their investments and not be able to acquire the latest new technology. Manufacturers need to keep giving away more power and more memory to customers every year, and the only way to do this is by increasing efficiency. If you don't add more performance to the system, your users will not tolerate the devices. Google's Chromebooks have been able to offer more performance to customers because of their design, and one significant thing that makes those systems
